Col. W. F. CODY
"Buffalo Bill"

THE WEST was still a wilderness when, in 1901, Colonel W. F. Cody (Buffalo Bill), famous scout and hunter of Indian warfare days, decided to build a hunting lodge up in the mountains where he might entertain the friends he had made all over the world. He chose a site high in the Absarokas, on the bank of the Shoshone River, in a dense forest of tall lodge pole pines. Here he built a huge lodge of native logs, two stories in height, several cabins and numerous service buildings. At that time only a trail led to the spot and all finish materials had to be carried in on pack horses. Not until four years later was a rough "tote" road constructed, so that materials needed to complete the hunting camp could be taken in on freight wagons.

So proud of his hunting lodge was Buffalo Bill that he gave it his Sioux name "Pahaska," meaning "Long-Haired Man." And here for many years the Colonel entertained not only his own "home country" friends, but Eastern celebrities and European royalty. Perhaps his most famous party was that given in 1913 to Albert I, Prince of Monaco, with sixty days of entertainment and big game hunting.

From this camp has grown the Pahaska Teepee of today, and although many new structures have been added, until it is now more adequately to be described as a "complete mountain village," yet the main lodge and many of the other buildings are still in use. In spite of changes which have come with the advent of "civilization" to this region, the atmosphere of the old West still survives and many are the wild frontier and Indian stories told and re-enacted today before the old fireplace in the lodge. Though the old master is gone, his spirit lingers, and as you sit before the blazing logs, out of them seem to leap vivid panoramas of the past and you find yourself wishing that you too might have played a part in the thrilling Western drama of fifty years ago.

THE PAHASKA OF TODAY

Today a paved motor highway (U. S. Nos. 14 and 20) leading from Cody to Yellowstone Park—the famed "Cody Road," aptly described as the "most scenic seventy miles in the world"—passes by Pahaska's doors. For a distance of approximately sixty miles extending from the east boundary of the Shoshone National Forest to Fishing Bridge, well inside Yellowstone Park, Pahaska Teepee is the only habitation other than the nearby Park Gateway which is right on the highway. By reason of this paradoxical combination of isolation and accessibility, Pahaska has grown from a primitive hunting camp into a world famous tourist lodge which offers every service, convenience and comfort to the motor traveler, and at a price everyone can afford.

You will appreciate Pahaska especially because it provides your first cool night of rest under blankets if you are westbound from the hot prairies and is your last cool stop as you leave the Park eastward bound. After a night at Pahaska (altitude 6672 feet) you are fresh and eager for a full day of thrills amid the wonders of Yellowstone Park, and many tourists every summer make their headquarters at Pahaska Teepee, driving in and out of the Park each day.

Sleeping quarters are provided in the main lodge and in nearby log cabins of two, four and six rooms. Rooms and cabins are charmingly furnished. Most of the beds are equipped with innerspring mattresses and all are comfortable. Cabin rooms are available with private bath; all others are conveniently close to modern toilet facilities and either tub or shower baths. A limited number of housekeeping cabins are available.

The lodge lounge, writing room, dancing and music room and the spacious porch, with its view of mountains and rivers, and of moose feeding along the banks, provide delightful diversion for your leisure hours.

There are no formalities at Pahaska: travel apparel is always in order. Come in as you are, enjoy yourselves and be comfortable.

ALL THE COMFORTS OF HOME—AND COOL

The lodge dining room offers both family style meals and "a la carte" service and you will be agreeably surprised at the fresh quality foods served at such reasonable prices so far from civilization. Should you miss the regular dining room hours, you will be taken care of in the cafe.

The cafe-store is located right beside the highway, with convenient parking space. For those in a hurry it provides a quick meal at popular prices with a minimum loss of time from driving. It is open from 6:30 A. M. to 10:30 P. M., so that you may be sure of an early breakfast or a late dinner, and is a most popular noonday luncheon spot. Featured dishes every day in both cafe and dining room are fresh mountain trout, fried chicken, and prime steak.

The store carries a stock of curios, groceries, candy, tobacco, soft drinks, ice cream, drug sundries, post cards and pictures, and a full stock of kodak film.

With an expert mechanic in charge, the garage is equipped to handle not only minor adjustments but major
